Dáire io, npr. m, with long ā and slender r, not to be confused with Darae of different origin. It rhymes with gáire CRR 6. 1; with báire LL 158 a 24: sáiset a mbáre dia brath: co tarb nDaire meic Fiachrach; with áine CZ iii 41 st 1; with cnámi, ib 43 st 13; with náire, Metr. Ds. iii 134. 12; with sále, Men. 24. 22. There is no genuine npr. Daire with short a. Dáire went early out of use as a npr. In late MSS it is usually written Daire with unaccented a. Where Daire occurs in verse in connection with a npr. rhyming with a short syllable, it is the n.l. Daire, as MacC. 430 st 3: Domnall Daire (: bladaide). The writing Dare is sometimes ambiguous as it may render Darae as well as Dáire. Dáire is the right form for the following npr.

Dáirine Dárinne io, n. Tribe-name formed from Dáire with the neutral suffix -ne. Usually written Dairḟine through false association with fine. The dative Dáirḟiniu (Exp. 23, Cymmrodor xiii) and passages like rí Dáirḟine duind BR 82. 2 f.b. are against the analysis as Dáir-ḟine, fine being a fem. stem in iā (Wb 28 a 4). In this connection the phrase Fine Dáire LL 14 a 33, Cóir A. § 68 is of no consequence.—Also pl.: do Dairinib dó SG 311. 44.

dam-gaire ia, f. (fem. LL 118 a 13. IT iii 89. 11.) Usually translated a herd of stags or deer (Stokes, Lism. L. p. 389, 410 b 2—but 240. 30 stags in heat, as TTr.² 1159—Kuno Meyer, Contr.). But the frequent appearance of damgaire in phrases such as 'oc búiriud, oc béicid amal dam damgaire, dorddan (daim) damgaire,' and, like cúgaire, as the object of rocluinethar, seems to indicate the meaning a bellowing or roaring of a stag. This is not disproved by the place-name Druimm Damgaire, nor by the passage Lism. L. p. 389. Damgaire like cúgaire has short penultimate, as shown by the rhyme with 'glaine,' Anecd. ii 24. 3, and by IT iii 89. 11, both cited below.

A. 225 (BB): fir domnann .i. fir ceadail (i.e. ceangail), and CZ v 485. 17 (cited above), are not sufficient to prove the meaning tie. In fact, the meaning tie, bind would not be expected with this root, whether one sees in damnaim the Celtic equivalent of Gr. δάμνημι (as Strachan proposes, Verb. Syst. of SR p. 61), or, as might also be suggested, a loanword from Lat. dominari (cf. the o-form domnaim, not found with 1 damnaid), which in time fell together with 1 damnaid (from Lat. damnare). The true Irish cognate of δάμνημι is daimim, Celtic agreeing with Scr. and Germ. in forming the present with io. The complete absence of primary inflexion and of a vn. formed directly from the root is against the comparison damnaim: δάμνημι.

Other professionals mentioned in the Laws are the ailtiri (probably a subdivision of saír), cairemain 'shoemakers, leathern-bottle makers,' círmairi 'combers,' geibich 'cloth-figurers,' iascairi 'fishermen,' nascairi 'chain-makers,' rindaigi 'engravers,' tornóiri 'turners,' tuathait 'shield-coverers,' v. Laws v 106 ff. To these may be added from other texts the senchaidi 'historians,' the grammarians, the chess-players, the lucht cumachtai 'folk of might' (including the corrguinig, tuathaig 'sorcerers,' ammaiti 'wizards'), the araid 'charioteers,' selgairi 'hunters,' deogbairi 'cupbearers,' &c., cf. RC xii 76 ff. 88 ff. But farmers of land exercise no dán; in the Tecosca Cormaic LL 375 c 20 dán is used in opposition to orbae 'tilling land.'

The Laws make a distinction between dánae inunna the various branches or subdivisions of one and the same profession, and dánae écsamlai different professions, as is evident from the following passages: cethri dána inunda aigi he has four parallel professions (viz. the building of sea-ships, barques, canoes and vessels), v 104. 7. fer congeb trede .i. trí dána inanna aigi .i. durtech ⁊ muilinn ⁊ ibroracht, v 104. 21. fer congeb dede .i. fer congbus dá dán examla .i. goibnecht ⁊ cerdacht smithwork and goldwork v 104. 18. fer congeb ceatharda .i. cethra dána éxamla .i. goibnecht ⁊ cerdacht ailtirecht ⁊ gebidecht smithwork and goldwork, carpentry and cloth-figuring ib v 104. 30. dia mbeth dána éxamla aice beith eneclann cacha dána dib H 3. 18, p. 126. (b) i ndán (do) destined to, in store for; espec. destined by fate, fated, allotted; phonetically i nán. Synon. i cinniud, i tairngiriu.—Only in connection with atá or dorala. The phrase does not appear in the Glosses, and the earliest instances collected here are taken from the YBL and the LB. Dán used independently in the sense fate, destiny, is not common in Irish, though this meaning is frequently given by modern lexicographers (dán .i. cineaṁain P. O'C., cf. Coneys, O'R., Dinn.). A late instance is quoted VIII (a). It occurs, however, in spoken Gaelic: is duilich cur an aghaidh dàin to oppose fate is difficult (Macd. Gael. 1 dana (danae only O'Mulc. 294, v. 3 danae). Two. The quantity of -a- is uncertain. In CCath. 2239 and LU 89 a 5 it is marked as long ; but in both cases the mark of length might be due to association with the synonymous dá ; in the latter case all the other MSS, including YBL, omit the mark of length. Dana is mainly used in connection with the article, which, as is the case before dá in Old-Ir., always takes the form in : in dana, dat. don dana = in dá, don díb (don dá). Like dá it is placed immediately before the noun (which is put in the dual), and followed by the genitive of the tens of the numerals (in dana fichet déc).—Probably from †dá n-ái ; cechtar in dána for older cechtar nái. For the adj. sense comp. indarna = Oir. indala nái.

All examples collected below have been taken from MSS not older than the early 15th century with the exception of the one from LU. The Glosses contain no instances of dana ; but it appears several times in the commentaries to the Brehon Laws, though Atkinson does not mention it in his vocabulary. The way in which it is written in the Law-MSS proves that it was but seldom understood by the copyists. In all probability the word belonged to the late Old-Ir. and the early Mid.-Ir. periods.

The instances can be divided into three groups :

(a) in dana + subst. depend as a genetivus partitivus on a preceding cechtarde, nechtarde. This usage predominates in the Laws : dá fodein….i. dian urtrom ⁊ dian iartrom. colpthach sé screpall ar cach fodein cechtarde in dana fodein a colpach of six screpalls for each 'fodian' of the two 'fodian's' Laws v 60. 4. To this head belongs the misjudged phrase nechtardae (cechtardae) in dana imbed sin either (each) of the two parties, both in the commentaries to the Senchus Mór, corresponding to the nechtar (cechtar, aile) da lína of the main text. díleas do cechtar da lína cia rochaithe cia tormala cechtar da lína ar araile .i. is díleas do cechtarde in dana imad sin, Laws ii 342. 9. ní bi cor cor nechtar da lína sech araile .i. noco cunnrad cundrad nechtarde in dana imad sin sech a céile, ib ii 358. 15. mad aile da lína .i. mad nechtarde in dana imad sin, ii 366. 14 (cf. 394. 20). So also 362. 13 ; 380. 14 ; 394. 20. Noteworthy is ii 374. 11 with its cechtarde in da imat (cf. cechtar in da rann, Sg 74 b 5). For cechtarde in da nadimat sain, ii 378. 14 read c. in dana imat s. The reading nechtar in da nannat sin, ii 317. 7 and 318. 18, is accounted for by the common misreading of im as nn. Ib ii 326. 17, inat is to be restored to imat.

(b) in dana independent of nechtardae, cechtardae : ite in da fasachaib .i. is iat in dana fis (sic leg.) ogsa nos foirichnigend uili, Laws i 230. 1 (comm.). clochsairsi ⁊ crannsairsi ⁊ in dana dan as uaisli dib….i. damliag ⁊ duirrthech, ib v 92. 1 f.b. V In depreciatory sense a cruel and ferocious foreigner or barbarian, a robber, pirate, bandit; often connected with allmarach, díberggach, innarbthach; synon. anmarggach. It is probable but not certain that this sense arose on Irish ground, although a similar development of meaning has taken place also in Old-Norse. Brjótr berg-dana 'the oppressor of the giants' (the rísir) occurs in the Snorris Edda (i 882. 2; Hýmk. 17) as an epitheton of Thórr, and ib i 298. 2, flóðrifs Danir applies to the rísir. fer díthláithrigh danar ⁊ díbhergach ⁊ innarptha allmurach ⁊ echtairchineoil a hÉrinn the extirpator of bandits and marauders ALC i 582. 20 (A.D. 1316). torchair .xc. danar dibergach sacsanach ⁊ lochlannach aroen friu, Cog. 206. 13. fiche cét danar diaṅ dolig dibercach durcraideach do anmargachaib, ib 152. 4. ní baí danar no díbergach don fichit cét sin can lúrig, ib 152. 7. (modelled on didiu? daniu: danu = didiu: didu); niu the dative of ní in Mil seems a late form and should not be compared. It is worth noticing that in the Old-Ir. Glosses on St. Augustinus' Enchiridion 85 a (CZ vii 485. 6) Lat. denuo is glossed by nuu. The oldest meaning of dano is that of denuo 'anew, again' (e.g. MT 149. 26). All other meanings arose from this.

There is no Mid.-Ir. †dni; for 'dni' FM v 1552 read didiu (dī, Aut. MS fo 87 a).

Of the Old-Ir. forms dono arose from dano, as ocus from acus, under the influence of the u-shaded 'n.' At the time of the Würzburg Glosses dano was still kept distinct from dono, the latter being used after interrogatives apparently as an enclitic, without accent: ar cia dono, Wb 2 d 10. cepu dono, 7 d 16. ce dono, 8 d 15 (cf. cid dono, Laws i 48. 24; 54. 3 f.b.).

The syncopated Mid.-Ir. forms dno, no retaining 'o' show that also in Old-Ir. the stress fell on the ultimate, as dano stressed on the penultimate would have given Mid.-Ir. dana. The Mid.-Ir. writing denu (RC xii 72 § 44, cf. dechum, debert) points in the same direction. Compare also the writing doná in the FM. In poetry the accent falls on the ultimate:

The syncopated form is often used in poetry for the convenience of the metre. It appears in several poems ascribed to poets of the 11th and 12th centuries, e.g.—

LL 144 a 9: Almon rathuit artús dā (dno leg.)
i nEtail ra Troiano.

(a poem by Giolla an Choimdhedh Ua Cormaic of the early 12th century).

LL 8 a 39: anmand tri mac Nemid dā (dno leg.)
Luach Cessarni ⁊ Luachro.

(poem by Tanaidhe Ua Maoilchonaire †1136; v.l. no BB 46 a 19).

LL 34 b 31: i ndáil fer talman sund dno
[labrad] (cf. l. 43) lá is aidchi rempo.

(poem by Cúán O'Lothcháin †1024).

Further in a 10th-century poem from Rawl. 1 a 1, Hib. Min. 40 st 3:

fuilriud már guin dóine dno

in Fingen mac Flainn's poem on the Fir Arddae from the middle of the 9th century, Arch. iii 297 st 60:

ní mandingentar d*no* dóibsium

and Imr. Máiledúin st 188:

atchitis dno (sic leg.) triasan tor sin forsin dorus

This brings us back to the time of the Codex Sangallensis; whence it follows that dno, though not occurring in any MS older than the LU, belongs to the Old-Ir. period.—No was developed from dno in Mid.-Ir. time. It seems impossible to fix the date of this development accurately. The appearance of 'no' in old poetry, as BB 46 a 19, 297 b 42, is no test, as no might be a late substitute for dno. The fact that the earliest instances occur in the LL points to the 12th century. In Mid.-Ir. MSS dā, dno, and no go hand in hand. The spoken form was dno, later no; but the traditional writing dā lingered on for centuries in the MSS. No is found in MSS from the early 13th to the 15th century, when it became obsolete. The FM write doná, dana, dna, purely literary forms. In the Annals of Ulster the particle does not in any form occur after the year 1204 (AU ii 242. 2).

In Mid.-Ir. no syntactical distinction is made between dā, dno, dna, and no. The particle is never placed at the head of the sentence, but can, apart from this, occupy almost any position within it. It follows stressed and unstressed words, and appears particularly often after emphasising particles, a circumstance which contributed to the syncope of the first syllable. It gives a certain emphasis to the accented word immediately preceding. The following is a synopsis of the most common positions of the particle:

(1) asbeir daniu ind apstol, Cambr. 37 d. torchratar no muinter Fintain LL 91 a 54. bemmini dano, Wb 9 c 10. mathidsom dano MT 138. 26. dogénsa no CRR § 9. (2) abi mogasi dano, Wb 27 c 17. Dā, no (&c.) is a particle mainly employed in principal clauses, though both in Old- and Mid.-Ir. it also appears in secondary ones. Already in Old-Ir. often = didiu, trá. In Mid.-Ir. MSS the interchange between dā, dī, tra, and imorro is quite common; cf. Windisch's note IT Glossary 467. dā LL 316 b 28 = dī BB 133 b 9. Particularly common issed dī = issed dā, nó dī = nó dō.

dant-mír nn, n. Usually identified with curad-mír 'the heroes' morsel,' but dant-mír seems to signify a piece of food which, according to old custom, was put between the teeth of the dead: rosfúair hi fástig oc fuiniu héisc for indéin ⁊ bae cenn Lomnai for bir hi cinn na tened. in cétlucht doralad dind indéin rantai Coirpri doa tríb nonburaib ⁊ ní tardad dantmír i mbeolu in chinn olṡodain ba geis la Fiannu the first batch that was taken from the gridiron, Coirpre distributes it to his thrice nine men; but the 'dantmír' was not put into the mouth of the head though it was a 'geis' with the ancients (to do so) Corm. Bodl. 30. 2. Stokes's interpolation is wrong and disturbs the sense. The custom must have been deeply rooted, for in the old Egerton fragment of Finn's death, CZ i 464 sq., it is told how supernatural powers secure the dant-mír for the decapitated head of Finn: confuaradar iascaire na Boinde. ceathrar dóibh .i. trímaic Uircreann ⁊ Aicleach… conécmaing Aicleach a cheann de ⁊ corubhradar maic U.—rucsat a chenn leo i ḟásteach ⁊ rofuinsit a niasc ⁊ roransat i nde. a cheann hi cind tenedh. tabraid dantmír dó or fer dubh docluichi ó na mair Aicleach. rorannadh in tiasc i nde .i. fo thrí ⁊ badar trí cuibhrind ann béos. cidh so or fer díbh. is ann isbert an cend a cind tened:

arnatabhar damsa oc proind uaibsi mo ṁír ma…ele.

The Brehon Laws punished the removal of the 'dantmír' with 'athgabáil treise': athgabáil treise i folomrad do mairb (ds. fem.)…im archor auptha mimir do chor do choin dantmir do breith ó fir besa ái carrying away the 'dantmír' from the person to whom it belongs Laws i 176. 4; to which the commentary adds the following note: .i. curadmír .i. do breith ón fir isa hae hé .i. diablad in cura[d]mír no eneclann .i. amail roberta ó Choinculainn. eneclann and ar treisi, ib 180. 3 f.b. This seems only an attempt of the commentator to find some sense in a word that naturally enough was obscure to him, as the pagan custom it refers to was bound to have disappeared with Christianity. The appearance of the Welsh form dant in a word like dant-mír is strange. One expects dét-mír.—Obs.

Attar in the old text Anecd. iii 59 = atar (i.e. addar) as the frequent writing adar proves. Ata (i.e. adda) and inda are parallel forms; but they do not, as Quiggin (Vorton. Wörter p. 10) thinks, both render a spoken †ədàr. The interchange between Wb ata: Mil inda recalls that between Tur, Sg, Laws, LU adás: Mil indás (adoasa, Tur 25 a; adaas quam est Sg 190 a 4; adas, Laws v 370. 1 f.b.; ná bad lia a chénel ata buiden, Trip. i 148. 7; am anáithiu atæsiu LU, IT ii^{2} 213 l. 18). For the use of in compare perhaps Wb 5 b 34: si enim Deus naturalibus ramis non pepercit, gl. .i. indat iudei (the branches) which the Iudaei are (which the I. form). The short form da may be original or shortened from ata, the stress falling on the ultimate (noch da lim, Wb, almost as is-na-naicci, cach-la-sel and the like); in the Carm. Mil. it interchanges with inda to suit the metre; similarly dar and indar in SR. The usual explanation of the Mid.-Ir. indar as influenced by the deponent verb is wrong, as the form seems to have arisen at a time when the deponent was already on the wane. Early occurrences are SR 1674: dar lia ba dia airchisecht, and 6079: indar la; it is quite possible, however, that the original had 'da lia ba dia a.' and 'inda.' The r originates from the Mid.-Ir. preposition ra, ri = Old-Ir. la, fri, the r becoming an integral part of the preceding da; indar la, then, is a contamination of inda-ra and inda-la: comp. indarra Loegaire in the LU-version of the FBr. § 64. A similar development is shown by Mod.-Ir. dóigh, maith and aice, which in common speech often become dóil, mail and aicil: an dóigh leat? Is dóil; an maith leat? Is mail (Kerry); i naicil = i naice.

Usually at the head of the sentence, sometimes preceded by 'ocus,' or an emphatic 'ised' referring to the following sentence as PH 2693: ised dar lind is ara deggnímradaib rop áil leo olc dfagbáil dó. At the end of the clause: is cosmuil aicned na redland uile dar leinn, TBith., Ériu ii 126. 5. Also parenthetically: sé míli bliadan ó dénam na ndúl dar lem gur fégadh run rí Éirenn, MacC. 434. 3 (BB). táinig mithid dhúinn dar liom sgaradh OCL 16. 5. gidheadh a chontrardha sin theagṁas don pheacthach bhíos beó dar leis féin ag bogḟás a mbladhmann, &c., TSh. 239. 5 f.b. Often, when connected with lim or linn, followed by an emphasising particle like ém, ám. In Mid.-Ir. always followed by a principal clause, esp. by an assertive clause with is, ba, ní, &c.: dar liumsa is anocht áidchi tṡamna, Acall. 7653. dar limsa fuarais furtacht ⁊ fóirithin, ib 7177. dar le hIúdaidib imorro connicfitís a ḟastad ó bás PH 2044; cf. dalim rugenair, Carm. 2 darba a bondwoman, syn. cumal. darba .i. cumal .i. bantraill H 3. 18, p. 68 c. darba .i. imat .i. cumal amail atberr a Cáin techta bered darba mucha anfis .i. cumal ó chách tar éisi, O'Dav. 629. rohír dam...deich ndairbé, Amra Conrói, Ériu ii 3. 8 (H 3. 18 gl. .i. bancumala; darba YBL. ndarba, Eg. 88). atgaith dom...deich ndærba, ib 4. 7 (H 3. 18 gl. cumala; v.l. ndarba, Eg. darba YBL). The deich narba H 3. 18, p. 651 (gl. .i. deich cumala) stands for deich ndarba and the glossator's arba .i. cumal is a vox nihili.

All these forms seem to originate from an old compound dáir-bé, dáir-bae, dáir-ba (cf. dermár: dermăr). It is hardly necessary with Stokes, Ériu ii 9, to assume two etymologically different words dáir-be and darba (Stokes' darb, Ériu l.c., RC xxvii 88, is an imaginary sg. to darba, H 3. 18 reads darba); for 'darba' may be ascribed to the attempt of the grammarians to bring the no longer understood 'dairba' (i.e. daorbha) into accordance with the rule 'leathan la leathan.' That dáir-bé, as might be suggested, is only an etymologizing transformation of darba is strongly contradicted by the writing dærba, Amra Conrói H 3. 18.

The accent falls on the ultimate, comp. Bodl. ACC, RC xx 164. 1: teged Colomb cundáil cáin: i teg a ríg cech dardáin. Though dardáin does not seem to occur in Old-Ir. MSS, its appearance in such old texts as the ACC and the Brehon Laws is sufficient proof of its Old-Ir. origin. The e of the unaccented 'etar' would naturally assimilate itself to a preceding dé or dia, possibly as early as the early 8th century when dia was still dé.

Dairt and dartaid both originate from the root of dairid, dáir, but their relation to each other is not clear; dartaid looks like a nom. ag., dairt like a vn. Both words became early obsolete, probably in early Mid.-Ir. The form dairtid (dairtida, Laws v 386. 3 f.b.) shows the influence of dairt. Dartada in the passage: nocon ḟarrgaib acht teora dartada in Hérind .i. dairt i Cliu dairt i lLiniu dairt i Cuailṅgiu LL 389 a 10, is either due to confusion of dairt and dartaid, or it is an early instance of the Mid.-Ir. pl. in -adha.—Cf. dáir, dairid, dairt, dartán.

Like -s^n-, -s-, -d-, -das- also in time lost its force, as the frequent addition of the noun and independent pronoun shows. It has still some meaning in such phrases as: port indasfacca Meidb TBC 1458; tabair dam béos conusfortachtaige da cechoen PH 1423; conusfortachtaige dona trógaib, ib 4158—where the use of the pronoun is proleptical; but finally it lost all significance, and was in connection with co n- and dia n- felt as an inherent part of the conjunction: fuaratar folliuchta beca isin úir...conusfetatar co mbad hé Míchel roḟoillsig arde a ḟrecnarcusa and PH 6331—Cf. -da-, -da^n-.

It may also be sought in such passages as 'a Domnaill na ndath' BB 50 a 35, or 'a éicsin datha,' Metr. Dinds. ii 48. 38, see III above. According to the Cáin-law of fosterage (Laws ii 146 sq.) the colour of the clothes varied according to rank and dignity : fo miad cháich éitid a mic ótha fer miudbu co ríg (ii 146. 10). Satin and scarlet were prescribed for the son of the king of Erin (sroll ⁊ scarloit do mac ríg Érenn, ib 146. 16), black, yellowish, grey, and blay clothes for maic na ngrád féne (148. 3). Similarly the colours were fixed for the mac in airrech, mac in airrech túis, m. in a. aird, m. in a. forgill, and mac na ríg.

C Athi in late MSS, wrongly abstracted from Nathi (understood as n-Athi) and such phrases as bidathí a ainm, Cóir A. § 146 = bid Dathí, &c.

Already in the 11th century the meaning and origin of the name had become obscure to the Irish grammarians; and no wonder, for as a npr. Nathí became obsolete as early as the 6th century. It was associated with daith, daithe, swift, swiftness (and the npr. Daithe, Daithem, Daithen) as is clear from the marginal note LU 38 a: is de atberthea a nainm sin fris conid Dathi a ainm óndní is dathi gabálaid (ó daithi a gabáltais YBL 191 b 20, where the note has been adopted in the text), cf. Cóir A. § 146. The length of the final -í is attested by the archaic spelling Nathíi and the rhyme with trí, MacCarthy 212. 2 (LL). Dathí as the later form originated from the confusion of the N- of Nathí with the eclipsing n- after a preceding accusative or neuter noun: tech Nathí (understood as t. nDathi), babtizauit Echaich mac Nathí (mac nDathi) &c. To Nathí as the older form points also the alliteration with n- in old poetry, e.g. MacCarthy 212. 2 (LL): cethri cóic bliadna 's a trí: rogiallad do niurt Nathí (v.l. Dathi, BB): i Sléib Elpa na narm nán, &c. I have no example of Dathí alliterating with d- from old poetry. The accent falls on the ultimate, cf. the alliteration Na-thí: tolchar LL 150 b 30, 31 b 45. With Nathíi should be compared the npr. f. Daríi, the authoress of the Cáin Daríi; -íi seems the gs. of a npr. m. the nom. of which would be Old-Ir. Eo, identical with the tree-name (cf. the npr. given by Meyer, Sitzungsberichte 1912 xxxviii 798). This name actually occurs TBC 4870: co hEo mac Oircne. LL 94 b 7 f.b.: co hEo mac Forne. The genitive Íi, Í occurs in the npr. Mac Híi in the Oir. text Anecd. iii 61. 6, Mac Hí (the name of a deacon) LL 366 e 11. Compare the ivo- of Ogh. IVOCATTOS (Eochad), IVODACCA (†Eodach, not Uadag, as Macalister thinks, Epigr. iii 180), Gaul. IVORIX in a memorial inscription from Bordeaux. Nathíi 'the nephew of Eo,' then, in Ogh. would be †NETTA IVI (NIOTTA IVI) of the nephew of Eo, and in the book of Armagh †Nioth Íi, Niath Íi (cf. Nioth Fráich 15 b 2, Niath Taloirc 25 b). COMP. dattu, rhyming with maccu LL 142 a 12; datta, Laws v 274. 21.—dattae has the appearance of an adj. deriv. of 1 dath or of a past pc. of dathaid; but apparently the feeling of its connection with dath was early lost, as the marked divergence in meaning shows. Apart from the phrase 'is dattae lim' (already Wb 8 a 6), it mostly occurs in chevilles and stereotyped phrases, very often, as it seems, introduced to alliterate with a neighbouring noun in d-. It seems mainly a literary word, used by Mid.-Ir. writers in the vague sense of súairc and cáin, by which it is occasionally replaced even in comparatively old MSS (Rawl.).

The old inflexion is represented by ns. Daui, Dau, Dái: gs. Duiach (cf. ái poetry: gen. uath): np. Dauich. In Mid.-Ir. MSS we meet with a double inflexion, one starting from the ns. Daui, Dau, forming the gs. Daui, Dai; the other from the oblique cases (and np.) forming the ns. Duach. For ns. Daui cf. fili, óigi. Daui is a npr. in -vīk like Ogh. DENA-VECA (gs., †Dianach), RITTA-VECAS (gs., Rethach). Its Ogh. equivalent would probably be †DAVO-VECCA or †DASU-VECCA (= Dauoch), if, as is not unlikely, it is to be compared with Gaul. DAVOS or DASVVIOS. Dau appears to have become obsolete as a npr. as early as the early 7th century; the gen. Duach, however, lingered on throughout the Mid.-Ir. period in connection with Síl, Dál, Clann, Húi, and in place-names with Clúain, Ard (Ard nDuach, Laud 610, 99 a 1), &c.—Derived from Dau is Duichne, q.v.

DO FOR DI. The confusion of di and do in proclisis dates back to the Cambr. and the Wb glosses. It is quite possible that on the lips of the people di had as early as the 8th century the same forms as to-day, i.e. unstressed ḍə in proclisis, dí- in pronominal cpds. Under the influence of the latter forms (dím, dít, de), di de lingered on all through Mid.-Ir. The present de, dhe, is partly due to etymological spelling, partly (Cork, Kerry) renders a spoken de, ye = Oir. de (di + pron. 3 sg.), cf. mod. as, air, aige. The fusion of di and do was facilitated by their being unaccented ; but it was also partly due to syntactical confusion of these two prepositions which occasionally might both be used synonymously with one and the same verb.—do : prímgeinde do hireschaib, Wb 4 b 9. 10 a 15. 25 c 12. 31 d 2. In the 1 sg. and pl. monosyllabic dím and dínn are original. Wb díim, díinn either disyllabic under the influence of the 2 and 3 pl. or, more likely, Wb-spelling for dím, dínn ; cf. Wb rúun, ruún, ríi, &c.

di : frequent with us (and fo) : diucrae, diuderc, diunach (do-fonig), fordiuclainn, diummus, diupae, diupart, -diurat, diurad, -diuschi, diuscartae (domfoscarte, Mil 127 c 20). Cf. also diuchtraim, Wi.—Before most consonants : díbad, rodíbairg, díbe, díberg, díbdud, rodibda, díbert, díchenn, díchned, dichetal, -díchliter (díchlith, dícheilt), díchor (rodíchuired), dídnad, dígal, dígbáil, díguin, dílgud, dímeiccem, dírech, díscir, -díltised, díltud, -díxnigedar. Privative dí- very common : di-anim, -asnéte, -chin, -chmairc, -choem, -chretem, -chumuc, -grád, -gu, -ing, -miad, -rim, -thrub. Emphatic dí : díbec, dímór, díthrom (de- rare in this sense, cf. de-fordal, der-).

ORIGIN. Italo-Celt. dē, Ir. dí. In accented position also dĕ. The latter possibly includes the particle dis-, Lat. dis-. Compare especially the distinction made between dí-chor a putting away and de-chor a disagreement, a difference, diversity, and that between dí-taa stands apart and de-buith difference of opinion, dissent. De- from dis- possibly also in dedail. De- was either developed before broad consonants or possibly like Gr. δία it goes back to dis-a (modelled on μετά, κατά = Ir. ceta-). As dĕ- in the great majority of cases has the same functions as dí-, this explanation presupposes a blending of dē and dis in Irish. The original sense of dis- seems preserved only in nominal cpds. in Irish (de-chor, de-buith, de-dail).

OMISSION OF DI. Di is frequently omitted before the second of two substantives connected by ocus or nó: di ael ⁊ chrieid, Mil 102 d 9. ib 133 c 1. Wb 4 b 5. BDD § 1. MacCarthy, 62. 8 f.b. nech dia chlaind nó huib RC xxiv 202. 17.—Repeated: Wb 13 d 7, 25 c 12. Mil 67 b 17. RC xxv 240 § 13, 242 § 15. Acall. 5355. 7621. 7677.

SENSES. Di corresponds in usage closely to Lat. de, which it constantly translates in the Glosses, and with which it was identified by Irish grammarians: optimi de se meriti, gl. díb, Mil 61 b 17. de uita certamen, gl. din bethaid suithin, ib 39 a 1. exaltasti me de portis mortis, gl. dinaib dóirsib, 27 b 4. ib 19 d 18. 24 c 17. 25 a 19. 40 a 6, 7. 73 c 12. Tur 21. 59. 115. 132. 140. Thes. ii 26. 40, &c.—Mil 27 d 12 it is introduced to render Lat. dis- in vb. cpds.: non dissimulat, gl. ní deintamladar. Like Lat. de it does not usually apply to time, except in a few petrified phrases, such as di chéin, do ló, dadaig, daidchi, &c., cf. XLIX below. It unites the senses of the original ablative, instrumental and genitive.

A DI IN THE SENSE OF THE ORIGINAL ABLATIVE.—The difference between di and ass (removal of one object from within another) is shown by the following examples: tanísca Cuillius asa thruaill LU 65 b 36. tíscáil gái a hálad, O'Dav. p. 120; but: amal tíscar cend di luin LU 71 a 22. tairbling asa charput FB § 36; but: doarblaing den chamull, Tur 60. tuc a lán…asin dabaig medha, Acall. 7399. amal soersai lóain assin dabaig out of the vat Fél. 5 de, -te, -ti added to comparatives, corresponding in sense to Lat. eo, Eng. the. Identical with de from it, because of it. In Oir. still treated as an independent word and always written de (dé Wb 22 d 2; dæ Mil 90 a 11 = de); in Mid.-Ir. wholly enclitic and written together with the comparative, the unaspirated, now intervocalic, -d- according to the rules of spelling being written -t-: córaite (Oir. córu de). -d slender at all phases of the language and never discarded (Quiggin's explanation of 'a chách,' Vort. Wörter. 34, is wrong). Its place is immediately after the comparative, only exceptionally separated from it by an enclitic word as Mil. 23 d 23: [im]mi ardu ni de; ib 83 b 11: bid étrummu doib de.

In certain points the Mid.-Ir. usage diverges from Oir. In the Glosses -de is used proleptically, referring in a general way to a cause which follows introduced by the prep. di or trí, e.g.: A robtar erdarcu de dind ulc doratad forru they were the more famous for the evil that was inflicted on them Mil 47 a 18. airmi ardu ni de tri dul isna lucu arda for we are the higher for going into high places ib 23 d 23. is huilliu de mo freiscsiu do (= di) neuch rorádis su, Thes. ii 2. 34.—B (di, tri + vn. + gen.) conid étrummu dæ in bochtae...tri frescissin messa fíriéin ind ríg doib iarum so that the poverty is the lighter through their expectation of the just judgment of the king afterwards Mil 90 a 11. is moltaidiu de tri tabairt fortachtan cid du neuch nachidáirilli it is the more praiseworthy through giving help even to one who does not deserve it ib 84 c 13. (LU 60 a 38 fri seems used in a similar way: rafetammár ém in gilla sin ⁊ ní messaite fria fis is dalta dún.)—In Mid.-Ir. the prepositional expression was completely abandoned. The usage is illustrated by the following examples. A corresp. to A above: is moti a pian som cach olc dorónsat their suffering is the greater for the evil they have committed LU 33 b 3. Dead as an independent word was becoming obsolete at the beginning of the Mid.-Ir. period, and words like deired, cenn, and forcenn took its place. It was preserved, however, in prepositional phrases; but the o-inflexion gave way to the ā-inflexion, which latter seems as old as the Wb glosses (see above). The acc. sg. remained intact in the phrase co deod = mod. go deo. The change from the o- to the a- inflexion was facilitated by the parallel phrase i ndigaid (i ndegaid) which in Mid.-Ir., apart from the slender -d, was bound to fall together with diad. Mid.-Ir. i ndiaid, then, seems a contamination of Oir. i ndiad and i ndígaid; both render Lat. proinde (.i. i ndígaid sin, Mil 71 b 11; .i. i ndiad sin, Mil 65 a 12, 75 c 8; .i. inna diad, ib 63 a 7); corresponding to Sg 77 a 9: mac i ndead a athar, Wb 30 b 14 has: maic i ndegaid a nathre. Mid.-Ir. has i ndegaid (i ndegaid a athar, MacCarthy 282, 11 f.b.) and i ndiaid; but there is no trace of a Mid.-Ir. i ndígaid. In a phrase like the following: táinic in rechtaire i ndíaid in áil the steward came to get the fork RC xxix 220. 7, díaid should be traced to Oir. dígaid rather than to diad.

ORIGIN: Dead, i.e. †de-vedo-, is a cpd. of prep. de, as the interchange dead : diad (cf. degaid : dígaid) shows, and an old vn. of †de-ved leads off or out, the opposite of †to-ved leads on, Oir. dofeid. For †de-fed cf. du-dí (i.e. †dí-ved-s-t) translating Lat. inducat Mil 35 c 30 (dum-dísed diducet ib 78 b 18, dan-diat deducit eum Sg 77 a 4), and interchanging with de-, as in dead : dusn-deraid (†de-ro-fáid) transl. eduxit, Mil 99 b 13. Cf. dered 'end,' orig. vn. of †de-reth-. Thus tuus and dead spring from one and the same root. To fedid as the root of dead also point the adjectives didenach, dedenach, probably derivatives from a vn. †diden (cf. air-diden, tu-diden), cf. fedan, deidine.—Stokes' derivation, Sprachschatz 144, is wrong.

By the grammarians explained in various ways. (a) usually explained as = Dia brátho God of judgment Thes. ii 310. 26. Trip. 56. 6 (H 3. 18, Arch. iii 16 § 36). (b) already by Cormac connected with the Welsh formula min doiu braut 'by God of the judgment': mo debroth (v.l. luide mo de brot .i. mo dia brata) ol Patraic quod Scotici dicunt corrupte. síc hoc dici debet .i. muin doíu braut .i. muin didiu is meus. in díu is deus. in braut is judex .i. meus deus judex, Corm. s.v. mo d. (c) as a Hebrew word. debrath ebraice. brath loquella. debrath didiu délabrath, O'Mulc. 296. (d) debrath .i. brath indsce. debrath didiu .i. deil a brath H 3. 18, 69 b. (e) the explanation given in Colgan's Trias Thaum. pp. 53 and 59 is due to misunderstanding of the passage in Arm. 7 a 2 (Trip. 292. 26). (f) understood as degbriathar, Acall. 6648 (Franc. 73 a).

The rhymes with menman and celebrad (v. supra) do not necessarily prove original short -e-. Débroth the doom of God would be an ordinary cpd. of dia and bráth (u- stem), the latter passing into -broth in enclisis as scáth > scud (foscud, dsg.), gním > gnom. Mo d., dar mo d. by the doom that God will pass on me on the day of Judgment. It seems the Irish equivalent of W. 'min doiu braut,' not an adaptation of it. In 'mo d.,' debroth is probably the dative.

(a) mo debroth seems the oldest formula: 'cui irascens Sanctus Patricius cum maledictione dixit: mudebrod male fecisti. nusquam proficiat tibi ager in aeternum, Arm. 7 a 2. et ait S. Patricius mudebroth quamuis laboraueritis nec tamen proficiat, ib 6 b 1 = Trip. 289. 24 (transformed by Colgan Trias Thau. 53 into 'modebroth quod interpretatur quod non laboratis non proderit vobis'). mo debroth ol P., Corm., v. supra.—With strengthening om: mo debroth um ar Patraic bidh Hí Raduib do tṡíl trét umalóit, Acall. 6648.—atbiur mo debroth...noco fesser cid fil and noco nérus, Mac Cgl. 15: 16 (analogically after atbiursa mo bréithir, &c.).

dedgair i, adj. Phonet. deg(h)air, ded(h)air. The common transl. 'quick, nimble' has no support in the literature. It is due to O'Clery and wrongly concluded by him or some older lexicographer from passages where d. occurs side by side with dian and similar adjectives. deaghdhair .i. luath, O'Cl. Hence deaghair, 'swift or nimble,' Lhuyd; 'quick, nimble, agile, active,' P. di see de.

1 dĭ-, dĕ- Negative prefix before nouns, adjj., participles, verbals of necessity, and verbs: di- cech la cein is diultad, alaill is aidbliugud, Corm. Y 418. Before consonants usually dí- (díchoisc, dígraiss, dílmain, etc.). Cf. déinmech (dí-gnímach). de-+ro gives a new prefix der-, q.v. Before vowels the form varies. dí-: díármithe, díainme, díaisndísiu, (all from O.Ir. glosses). díorpus (orba), Trip.^{2} 1525. With elision: dairmitiu, dermitiu (airmitiu), denim (ainim, also díainim unblemished), deithbir (aithber), delam (alam), deinmne (ainmne), dergnaid (ergnaid), dindell (indell) Before f-: dífulacht, diulacht (fulacht), díḟulaing, díulaing (fulang), díḟuráil (furóil), dífholaig (fulach). Diarmait, Dermait (format) (the earliest exx. are written thus but in later lang. Díarmait). dĕolaid (folad) (deolid in Wb.: Eogain, LL). dĕorad (dí-fo-rath) (no early rhyming ex., deóra: feóla, Met. Dinds.). dé-, de- in nonce-compds. to translate Latin de-: déainmmneichthech denominatiuum, dechomsuidigthe decompositum. désetaige gl. (vita) devia. See Thurn. Gramm. §§ 831, 873. Lenites follg. initial. cenn, however, has its c mutated to g, e.g. dícenn, dígenn headless man (see O'Rahilly, Ériu xiii 140). Before b the prefix takes the form dim-; dimbáeth (baeth), dimbág, dimblad, dimbláith, dimblas, dimbocc, dimbraig (bríg), dimbríg, dimbras, dimbuaid, dimbuan, dimda (buide). Ped., ii 214, regards this as a development of di- before ml, mr spreading by analogy. Thurn., Gramm. p. 543, suggests that it may be a different prefix. Note also dimmolaid (molaid) disparages. Most freq. used with nouns to form adjectival compds. In these compds. o-stems and ā-stems generally take i-inflection, e.g. díaistir (aister), díaitrib, díáraig, díchéill, díchomlaind, díchuind, díradairc. Occasional exceptions are: díchomond (comann), díchondelg, and díoḟaosam (also diḟaessaim). As a number of these compds. were indistinguishable from the gen. sg. of noun preceded by dí- they are treated in the later language simply as attributive genitives, e.g. daíne dochla díchumaing, LU 3472 (see Bergin, Ériu xii 229). i-stems remain unchanged but gs. tends to be used in the later language, e.g. díainim, dícheist, díḟuráil but díaithgina, dichollna (colainn). u-stems remain unchanged (as far as the exx. serve), e.g. dígrád (grád love), dínním (sním), díṡolus. Nominal compds. formed from o- and ā-stems vary in inflexion, though on the whole they appear to resist the change to i-inflexion, e.g. díardain and díardan (ordan) anger (but always díordain angry), díchretem and díchretim (cretem) disbelief, díchíall lack of sense (always díchéill senseless), dígrád dishonour (always dígráid adj.), díthrub, -thrab. Other stems remain unaffected: dígním, díchruth, deinmne (ainmne), dígallrae. The adj. gand gives dígaind lit. not scanty. Adjj. in -ech show no change and may be derivatives rather than true compds.: díchoimsech, díḟoirithnech, díthaithmech. Otherwise there is no change. With partt., verbals of necessity, and verbs: díáirmide, díaisneithe, díaisneisi unspeakable, díbrethe not to be borne, díerrethe not to be paid; díchenglaid, díchlannaid, dimmolaid.

2 dí- de- intensive prefix used with nouns, adjj., and verbs: di- cech la cein is diultad, alaill is aidbliugud, Corm. Y 418. di enim scotice aliquando valde significat (sic leg.), O'Mulc. 311. difoichidi . . . di adbal 7 foichid galar, O'C. 264 (H. 3.18, 151^{b}). disle .i. dí uaisle .i. uaisle mhór, O'Cl. Usually dí- but note deḟordol great error and denocht stark naked. Lenites follg. initial. cenn as second element has its c mutated to g, e.g. dícenn, dígenn extreme end (see O'Rahilly, Ériu xiii 140). With nouns: díairde, díberg, díchuma, etc. With adjj. díchoimsid, dídaingen, dídomuin, etc. With a verb dínochtaid. See der-.

Y 1154. RC xii 74.3, 8. Anecd. iv p. xii. Buile S. § 3. In Ml. and later MSS. however nearly always contracted dī and by earlier editors generally expanded as din (so always in PH) or dino (through confusion with dano), or somet. diu (SG); dni, FM v 1552. Expanded as dino in TBC^2 422, 428, 434, 462, 469, 472, etc., where LU reads dano. Later also apparently d(h)e, see Ériu x 155.

Didiu never begins a sentence. It always has reference to something preceding. Exceptions are only apparent, e.g. Corm. Y 1053 (where puincern has been introduced in the preceding article) and 568 (cf. 519). It generally follows a more or less emphatic word, often a noun or pron., bút occasionally comes after ocus or nó at beginning of clause (esp. in PH); no dī may however = nō dō (= dano, q.v.).

dílmain i (dí+loman leash, O'Rahilly, Sc. G. St. ii 17 ff. q.v.).

The primary meaning appears to be free from restraint (?), without attachment; hence (a) applied to actions, that which is free, permissbile, without hindrance or penalty, and (b) of agent or instrument free (to act), unhampered. The connexion is shown in Wb. $14^{a}24$ where d. glosses vacuum in veniet cum ei vacuum fuerit = when it will be free to him to do so = in tan bus d. dó; and Bcr. $32^{c}3$ where indilmainiu = expeditius (aliis aptius multo et expeditius videtur ut computatio . . . incipiat).

In O.Ir. the general meaning is (a) is entitled to, has a right to, is owed (as a debt), passing into the kindred sense (b) deserves, merits. The construction is: dligim x do y I am entitled to x (thing) from y (person); y owes me x; I deserve x from y; the corresponding pass. being: dlegair x do y x is due from y. With Lat. dative (hence Ir. DO): dlegair discipulis orare, Wb. $26^{a}32$. In Mid. Ir. DO was confused with and ultimately supplanted by DE, the prep. being felt rather as = Lat. de, cf. Thes. ii 347.41: amal rodlecht de misero as (much as) was due from a poor fellow.

With poss. in passive sense: an uair bhíos dá chor amach when he is being evicted, TSh. 794. go raibhe dá ilchéasadh so that he was being tortured, 564.

V The construction subst.+do+vn. In sentences of the type (a) ansu liumsa ind oís anechtir dia fius it is more grievous to me that the outland folk should know it, Wb. 16^{d}12 (where ind oís is virtual subject of the vn.) and (b) ní date leu in coimdiu do crochad it is not agreeable to them that the Lord was crucified (lit. to crucify the Lord), 8^{a}6 (where in coimdiu is virtual object of the vn.), the O.Ir. construction is identical; in both sentences the case of the nouns oís, coimdiu is determined by their syntactical relation to the whole sentence, that of subject, while do+vn. stands in syntactical relation not to the whole sentence but to the noun, its function being that of a gerund. Similarly in the sentence: cocarad chaingnimu du denum he loved to do good deeds, Ml. 14^{a}8, the subst. caingnímu is the object of the sentence while du denum has the meaning for the doing, to be done. Exceptions are, however, frequent, see below. In each of the sections 1–4 the subsection (a) consists of exx. where the subst. is the virtual subject of the vn., (b) of exx. where it is the virtual object.

1 Subst. is subject of the whole sentence and therefore nom. case.

(a) dofórmaich fochricc dosom sochude do creittim tria precept that a multitude has believed through his preaching increaseth the reward for him, Wb. 1^{b}5. issed as brig la Dia menmae do biuth hi figraib that the mind should be in the symbols, Thes. ii 255.13. saoth lem int aos leigind do dul ind ifern, ZCP viii 470. ba lonn lais in mnai cuil do bith oc Hiruath he was indignant that the adulteress should be with H., PH 861. (Infl. of Lat. accus. and infin. constr.?)

(b) is maith int óis éula do accaldam, Wb. 3^{c}4. is bésad leusom in fid do thóbu, 5^{b}42. nipu techta in briathar diadhai . . . do scriphund ind oenluc, Hib. Min. 96. is cóir ind almsu do thabairt, PH 6136. With accus. of subst. (in first two exx. perh. dat. for nom.): is ferr dó in almsain do thabairt, PH 4969 (= melius est elimosinam dare, LB 47^{b}55). dlegar dínn ar n-imcaissin do thimorcain, PH 6870. ba machtnadh lasna Felistindaibh na fioru nomarbdais d'faicsin do cathughadh friu, Leb. Gab. 146.

2 Subst. as object of sentence (rarer in O.Ir.).

(a) nisn-águr dom díchill I do not fear that they will neglect me, Hy. v 105. rocúala in n-eress cetna do fhorbairt, Thes. ii 311. ni fitir in mnai dia brath he knew not that the woman was betraying him, SR 3207. rocuala Sattan in uli noemu do shubugud, PH 3819. With nom. for accus.: cuirfid [diabul] na boill d'fhognum do fén, 7799. atfét Lucás aingil do thidecht do nim, 3043.

(b) cocarad chaingnimu du denum, Ml. 14^{a}8. itconncabar bar náimtiu do bádud, PH 1713. forcongair D. cnamu do thabairt hi cuthi, 1219. With nom. for accus.: atbert fria múintir int apstal do thuarcain, PH 2141. atbert Ner na hapstail do cúibrech, 1858. atcondairc-som ind figeill . . . do dílgud, Mon. Tall. § 22.

3 Subst. is governed by a prep.

(a) for riaguil do buith isnaib anmanaib-se dotét híc he touches on the fact that there is a rule, Sg. 108^{a}3. fre terci . . . do tecmung, Mon. Tall. § 12.

(b) hua anmmaim ailiu do thórmuch friss, Sg. 30^{b}4. Cain Patraic . . . cen chleirciu do marbad, Thes. ii 306. tria doirse . . . na cathrach do forbrissiud, SR 5348. ar meisge ó chaoraibh na fíneamhna d'ithe, TSh. 8421.

4 Subst. in genitive relation to sentence.

(a) cui[n]chid flaithiusa Dé do thuidecht, PH 7907.

(b) cen imcabáil 'cum nobis' do epirt, Sg. 203^{a}8. ruc leis tásc a muintiri do marbad do E., FB § 69. tar cend cissa ⁊ indmussa do thabairt do, PH 51. ré linn choróine do chur ar an impire, TSh. 661.

5 The construction subst.+do+vn. may be used absolutely with force of the Lat. gerundive: ind .u. do accomol frisin fers ṅdédenach the 'u' is to be added, Sg. 136^{a}2. um do glanad i nderiud ferso 'um' is to be elided, 130^{a}1. Hence in continuation of prec. clause: dia n-oscailter in chomla sa ⁊ diabul do ligad istech if . . . and the devil be admitted, PH 7797. is mairg thic annsa saegul-sa ⁊ na huilc-si do thecht trit, 7791.

6 Subst.+do+vn. replacing finite tenses (esp. in annals): Góidil immorro do rad dib o Goediul Glas they are called G., Thes. ii 316. Lugaig du gabail rige nErenn took the kingship of Ireland, MacCarthy 306. bellum do madhmaim for hU Fiachrach, AU 815.

B Introducing a dative.

I Introducing indirect object (generally name of a person).

(a) With trans. vbs. denoting giving, granting, assigning, offering, etc.: do-beir, daimid, do-indnaig, dálaid etc. (see under individual vbs.). With vbs. of telling, revealing, promising, etc.: in-fét (ad-fét), as-indet, (Mid. Ir. indissid), do-adbat, do-airchain, etc. Under the same head may be placed cases like: hore doninfedam etargne Crist do chách we inspire in all, Wb. 14^{d}32; do Christ cachain ailli unto C. he sang praise, Fél. Apr. 26. Exceptionally with as-beir says: asbert G. do na feoldenmaigib, PH 1432. Brain § 28.

5 With subst. vb. in the idiom: atú dó I am concerned with him, have to deal with him, generally with hostile significance I am angry with him, have something against him; oft. in impers. constr.: ished inso romboth dossom that is why they were angry with him, Wb. 19^{a}9, cf. 5^{b}31. is hed dathar dún gl. maledicimur quod speramus, 28^{d}4, cf. 21^{c}9. ni nach cin aile notaid dom it is for no other fault you are hostile to me, 19^{d}26. cid tai-siu don mac? what have you against the lad? TBC 1041, cf. 940, 1144. rohinnisedh dó in fāth 'ma rabas dó, Moling § 51. cidh 'ma bfuile damh? ZCP x 10. tacram a scel . . . atái dam 'the matter with which thou reproachest me', Ériu vii 225. The idiom: cid di atái? what ails thee? LL 202^{a}9, where do is used with neut. rel. pron., may perhaps rather be explained as an elliptical construction under the head A II; as also the later idiom: gá táim dó (why should I dwell on it?): furtacht Banba . . . gá ttá mé dho . . . ag so an té dar tairrngireadh, 3 C 3, 633.11.

6 Used with ellipse of copula in the interrogation cid dó . . .? why (does) he . . .? (lit. what is it to him? with emphasis on pron.): cid dait gan a gabail aní gabas cách? why dost thou not take . . .? 3 do Verbal particle originating in O.Ir. representative of dí- and to- in deut. forms of verbal compds. (see Thurn. Gramm. §§ 831, 855). In Mid. and Mod. Ir. progressively replacing no with impf. and cond., and ro with perf. See Ó Catháin, ZCP xix 14 ff. In later lang. (but not in bardic verse, see IGT Introd. § 73) vowel freq. elided before follg. vowel or ḟ (see Ó Catháin 18 ff.): do-tharistis, PH 6184. do-lemfad, 602. do dīogheōlthaoi, Feis TC 409. do rachuind-si, St. Ercuil 1848. do ghabhdaois, TD 7.18. d'fedfaidis, St. Ercuil 1563. do dílsig, SR 1225. do goiredh, TBC 2260. do-marb se, PH 7484. do oir, DDána 93.52. d'ainic, St. Ercuil 2557. do fhortamhlaigh, 337. d'fagamair-ne, 2315. In later lang. also as rel. particle, see Éigse v 63–4.

do- du- prefix with pejorative or negative meaning used with nouns, adjj., participles, and verbals of necessity. On the variation do- du-, see Thurn. Gramm. § 365. In earliest compds. do- depalatalizes follg. initial, e.g. dolus, doraid. In later lang. the opposite is the case, e.g. doitheagasg. Lenites follg. initial: dochor, dochraid, doithcech (toicthech), etc. Exceptionally dobrón with unlenited b (but perh. dub + brón). Before b usually dom-, the unlenited b being eventually assimilated to the m (dombisech, dombinne, domblas, dombolad, dombuidech, dombuilech). This m may have originated in cases where b goes back to an etymological m. Cf. similar treatment after dí- (1 dí-). Most frequently used with nouns to form adjectival compds. in which o-stems and ā-stems usually take i- inflexion: doáirim (áram), dobeóil (bél), dochenéuil (cenél), daidbir (adbar), etc. As a number of these compds. were indistinguishable from the gen. sg. of a noun preceded by do- they are treated in the later language simply as attributive genitives: drechta dana dofuiling, ZCP vi 46.4. drong do dhaoinibh doitheaguisg, TSh. 554 (see Bergin, Ériu xii 229). Common with vnn.: dodingbála, dodíla (díl), doḟaicsena, doimmthechta, etc. The usage with u-stems varies: dochraid and dochrud (cruth). Nouns used with do- to form nominal compds. suffer no change of inflexion: dobás, dobert, doleiges (leiges; always doleigis incurable), dúalaig (álaig), dolus, doṡolus, dobés and dobus (bés), domenma, donaidm, etc. With adjj., participles, and verbals of necessity: dobíadach, dobuidech, doithcech (toicthech), doerráidech, dothengthach, dombuilech (bailech), doléir, doraid (réid), doáirmithe, doaisnéisi, dochreitte, doguitte, domesta, etc.

do-beir (*to-ber-, Ped. ii 469), gives, places; brings, gets. The perfective forms are supplied, in the meaning gives, places, by *to-rat-, in the meaning brings, gets by *to-ucc-; in later lang. the perf. do-ucc (tuc) gradually takes the place of dobert and do-rat and is sometimes used to gloss the two latter, cf. tard .i. tug, O'Cl. Forms of *to-rat- are, however, permissible in bardic verse, see IGT Verbs § 14. The perfective *to-ucc- (lit. can bring) also forms a complete paradigm without distinction of perfective and non-perfective forms, with the meaning understands (later tuicid) the vn. being 2 tabairt later replaced by tuicsiu.

do-cuirethar (*to-cuir-, Ped. ii 501), in O.Ir. a deponent vb. used in the senses (1) puts and (2) invites. For the development of meaning (2) see Gaidoz, RC xxiii 91. In O.Ir. (1) occurs chiefly in 3 s., often in impers. construction; in subj. and pret. the root la- is used side by side with cuir- and the fut. is supplied by *to-(fo)cherr- (cf. cuirid); in (2) all forms are supplied by *to-cuir-. In later Mid.Ir. *to-cuir- comes to be represented by tochraid (tachraid), treated as a simple vb. and often forming an ē- fut. (see TBC 5707, Cog. 225.18 = LL 309^{b}3, Acall. 1137, Aen. 290), while dorala or tarla (the former of which survives as late as the 17th cent.) exists independently in the sense met, happened. The form tachraid may be regarded as a lineal descendant of do-cuirethar, dochuir[id], -tochraid rather than as a distinct denom. vb. formed from the vn. tochur, tachar, the syncopated form (common already in Mid. Ir.) being probably due to the need for distinguishing it from tochuirid invites, in which syncope does not as a rule occur. See Thurn. Gramm. § 762. IGT Verbs § 95.
